Introduction: Animal Ingredients and the Production of Alcoholic Beverages

The use of animal derived products in the production of alcoholic beverages is fairly widespread, not because no alternatives exist, but because they always have been used and there is little demand from the consumer for an alternative.

The main obstacle when trying to judge the acceptability to vegetarians and vegans of any given alcoholic beverage is the fact that very few alcoholic beverages list all their ingredients on the label. Furthermore, when ingredients are listed, they rarely include a list of animal derived products which were used during the production process, but which are not technically "in" the beverage in its final form. In the UK, a clause in the 1984 Food Labeling Regulations (UK) excludes from the 1984 Food Act all drinks with an alcohol content exceeding 1.2% by volume (ABV), leaving only very low or non-alcoholic beers, wines and ciders being required to list all ingredients.

The main appearance of animal derived products is in the fining or clearing process, though others may be used as colorants or anti-foaming agents. Also, alcohol is routinely tested on thousands of animals each year (though this is not usually done directly by any individual company).

Beer

Cask-conditioned ales need fining to clear the material (especially the yeast) held in suspension in the liquid. This is invariably done by adding isinglass, derived from the swim bladders of certain tropical fish especially the Chinese sturgeon, which acts as a falling suspension. If you were to hold a pint of real ale up to the light and see cloudy lumps swirling around, that would suggest that the cask had been recently disturbed and the isinglass shaken up from the bottom. Bottled, naturally conditioned beers will not always have been treated with isinglass. Keg Beers and Lagers are pasteurized and usually passed through Chill Filters, as are canned beers and some bottled beers, however, a considerable number of breweries still use isinglass to clear their pasteurized beers, though sometimes only to rescue selected batches which are considered too hazy. Also occasionally the sometimes animal derived additive Glyceryl Monostearate is used in place of 900 Dimethylpolysiloxane as a foam-control agent in the production of keg beers.

It is sometimes possible to buy barrels of cask-conditioned beer from a brewery before it has been fined. The beer would then have to be left for a considerable time to stand before consumption.

Cider

Most of the main brands of cider will have been fined using gelatin. Stronger type ciders are less likely to have been fined.

Wine

With wine, it is again in the fining process that animal derived ingredients make an appearance. Finings can be isinglass, gelatin, egg albumen, modified casein (from milk), chitin (derived from the shells of crabs or lobsters) or ox blood (rarely used today). But alternatives do exist in the form of bentonite, kieselguhr, kaolin and silica gel or solution. Also newer methods such as centrifuging and filtering are becoming more popular. The majority of organic wines do not use animal derived finings - but some do. Thorson's Organic Wine Guide by Jerry Lockspeiser and Jackie Gear, lists those wines which are suitable. You might like to note that the Wine Development Board claim that the fining agents are removed at the end of the process with the possible exception of very minute quantities.

Spirits

Most spirits appear to be acceptable to vegetarians, with the possible exception of Malt Whisky, some blended whiskies and Spanish Brandies which have been conditioned in casks which had previously held sherry which may have been treated with animal derived finings. (Brandy itself is not produced from wine which has undergone any fining processes). Also some imported Vodkas may have been passed through a bone charcoal filter.

Fortified Wines

All ports except crusted port are fined using gelatin. Sherry should be treated in a similar way to wine.

Colorants

E120 cochineal is produced by extracting the red body material from pregnant scale insects of the species Dactilopius Coccus. It is used as a colorant in a small number of red wines, soft drinks and Campari.

Chapter 1

486 Vegan Alcoholic Beverages

Introduction

The glossary in this chapter contains only 100% vegan alcoholic beverages. They do not contain any ingredients derived from animal products, nor have animal products been used in the manufacturing process.[#]

We welcome corrections or additions to this glossary. Such corrections can help us ensure that we keep this list as accurate as possible, reflecting the most recent changes in alcohol production. Please send any corrections or additions to chad@arborgroup.org.

Using This Glossary

There are 5 columns in the glossary.

The column labeled "Vegan Alcoholic Beverages" contains the specific name of the beverage.

Information about the location of the producer or distributor is contained in the "Country/State" column. If the beverage is widely available, or the location was not available in our research, this column was left blank.

The "Brand/Producer/Distributor" and "Notes" columns are self explanatory.

The "Source" column allows you to trace the information back to the original source of our research. In a large percentage of cases, the original sources of our research confirmed the vegan status of a beverage through direct contact with the producer of the beverage. With others, a beverage's status was confirmed through reliable secondary sources. Feel free to contact the original producer of any beverage if you have questions. In most cases, this information is available if you follow the link to the original source of the information at the end of each page in this chapter.

Chapter 2

363 Vegetarian Alcoholic Beverages

Introduction

The glossary in this chapter contains vegetarian alcoholic beverages. Many of these beverages are not suitable for vegans. Those which are not suitable for vegans contain dairy or egg products, or have had dairy or egg products used in the manufacturing process. The animal products in these beverages are limited to dairy and/or egg products only.

We welcome corrections or additions to this glossary. Such corrections can help us ensure that we keep this list as accurate as possible, reflecting the most recent changes in alcohol production. Please send any corrections or additions to chad@arborgroup.org.

Using This Glossary

There are 5 columns in the glossary.

The column labeled "Vegetarian (Not Necessarily Vegan)" contains the specific name of the beverage. See the "Introduction" section of this chapter for information on why these beverages are suitable to vegetarians but not vegans.

The "Brand/Producer/Distributor," "Notes," and "Beverage Type" columns are self explanatory.

The "Source" column allows you to trace the information back to the original source of our research. In a large percentage of cases, the original sources of our research confirmed the vegetarian status of a beverage through direct contact with the producer of the beverage. With others, a beverage's status was confirmed through reliable secondary sources. Feel free to contact the original producer of any beverage if you have questions. In most cases, this information is available if you follow the link to the original source of the information at the end of each page in this chapter.

Chapter 3:

151 Non Vegetarian Alcoholic Beverages

Introduction

The glossary in this chapter contains alcoholic beverages which are not suitable for vegetarians or vegans. These beverages have used animal ingredients in the fining or clearing process, as filters, as lubricants in the manufacturing process, as colorants, and/or as anti-foaming agents. Sometimes, the manufacturer simply contacted our sources with a simple statement that their beverages are not suitable for vegans or vegetarians. If we were unable to determine the vegan or vegetarian status of a beverage, it was included in this list as "unsuitable" until proven otherwise. This is simply because the use of animal products during the manufacture of alcoholic beverages is extremely common, and it is better to err on the side of caution.

We welcome corrections or additions to this glossary. Such corrections can help us ensure that we keep this list as accurate as possible, reflecting the most recent changes in alcohol production. Please send any corrections or additions to chad@arborgroup.org.

Using This Glossary

There are 6 columns in the glossary.

The column labeled "Not Vegetarian or Vegan" contains the specific name of the beverage.

The "Brand/Producer/Distributor" and "Notes" "Beverage Type" columns are self explanatory.

The "Source" column indicates how this particular beverage was found to be unsuitable for vegetarians and vegans. In most cases this information was obtained directly from the manufacturer.

The "Source Document" column allows you to trace the information back to the original source of our research. Feel free to contact the original producer of any beverage if you have questions. In most cases, this information is available if you follow the link to the original source of the information at the end of each page in this chapter.
