Introduction: Finding 100% Vegan, Vegetarian, and Cruelty-Free Products

In a recent survey that we completed of vegetarians and vegans, 38% said their biggest frustration as a vegetarian or vegan was finding vegetarian and vegan foods, restaurants, and products. We have devoted much energy to helping vegetarians and vegans solve this problem in our various books. We've compiled glossaries of animal-derived additives and hidden ingredients. We've created lists of vegan products and alcoholic drinks. We've published reports on how to distinguish vegetarian and vegan products from non-vegetarian or non-vegan products. However, many vegans and vegetarians have found that hidden animal ingredients inevitably sneak in to the "animal-free" diet, despite their painstaking efforts.

How can a vegetarian or vegan successfully eliminate animal products and animal cruelty from their shopping? It sometimes seems impossible, given the complexities of food and cosmetics manufacturing, the cryptic nature of ingredient labels, and the numerous ways that animal ingredients have infiltrated our world.

There is a way! The simplest, surest way to pursue a 100% vegan or vegetarian lifestyle is to purchase products from companies and distributors that cater specifically to vegan and vegetarian interests. Not only will this allow you to live free from that nagging suspicion that the broth in your canned "vegetable soup" tastes a bit like beef, but it will support the vegetarian and vegan movements in society. There are a large number of such companies throughout the world. Such companies are managed by conscientious people who ensure that the products they produce are animal-ingredient-free and cruelty-free. They take the time to carefully label their products so vegetarians and vegans can make informed choices about what they purchase and consume. They do the work and analysis to make sure their products are 100% animal-ingredient free so you won't have to!

That is why we created this book. It includes a number of different lists, focusing specifically on distributors, manufacturers, and other companies that cater to vegetarian and vegan needs. One chapters focuses on companies to avoid based on their use of animal testing.

As always, the final responsibility of being a conscientious consumer rests with you. Please don't stop reading labels or checking manufacturer websites, because companies do change their policies. However, the information in this book can help guide you towards a guilt-free, stress-free, vegan or vegetarian life.

Chapter 1

196 Vegan and Vegetarian Food Manufacturers

Introduction

Like we've said before, the best way to avoid animal ingredients in your food is by simply purchasing foods directly from companies that specialize in manufacturing 100% vegan/vegetarian food and ingredients. That is why we've compiled the list below. For the most part, the companies in this list cater to vegans or vegetarians. These companies are very conscientious about the ingredients they use and the foods they manufacture. Of the companies in this list that don't cater specifically to vegetarians and vegans, most have strict requirements about the kinds of ingredients they use, and will be glad to work with a vegetarian or vegan inquiring about the suitability of their products. The list below was compiled in October 2004 from a variety of sources deemed accurate.

Many of these can be purchased online and shipped inexpensively.

We welcome corrections or additions to this list. Such corrections can help us ensure that we keep this list as accurate as possible, reflecting the most recent changes in food production. Please send any corrections or additions to chad@arborgroup.org.

Chapter 2

511 Companies that Don't Test on Animals

Important notes about this list:

The list includes cosmetics, animal food, personal care, and household cleaning product companies only. No law requires animal testing of these types of products, so manufacturers of these products have no excuse for animal testing and should be boycotted until they change to a non-animal testing policy.

The list does not include companies that manufacture only products that are required by law to be tested on animals (e.g., pharmaceuticals, automotive and garden chemicals, food additives, etc.). While we are opposed to all animal testing, our quarrel in this matter is with the regulatory agencies that require animal testing. Nonetheless, it is important to let companies know that it is their responsibility to convince the regulatory agencies that there is a better way to determine product safety.

The “don’t test” list may include companies that manufacture both products that are and products that are not required to be tested on animals, but, in order to be listed, each company has stated that it does not conduct any animal tests that are not required by law.

How Does a Company Get on the List?

Companies listed either have signed the statement of assurance created by People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, or provided a statement verifying that they do not conduct or commission any non-required animal tests on ingredients, formulations, or finished products and that they pledge not to do so in the future.

How Do I Know That These Companies Really Don't Test on Animals?

To a degree, the statement of assurance is a matter of trust. However, companies are putting their integrity on the line when they respond to consumers. A company that has publicly announced an end to its animal tests and states in writing that it doesn't test on animals would face a public relations disaster (and potential lawsuits) if it were caught testing on animals. Companies are well aware that consumers are serious about the issue of animal testing, and they know that it would ruin the public's confidence in their products if it were discovered that they were being dishonest about their animal-testing policies.

What About a Product Whose Label Says, “No Animal Testing,” But Whose Manufacturing Company Is Not on this “Don’t Test” List?

Labels can be deceiving, so be careful. No specific laws exist regarding cruelty-free labeling of products, so companies can take liberties. While it is unlikely that a company would put blatantly false information regarding its animal-testing practices on its products, the statements it does make may not be fully informative and may indeed mislead consumers. For example, the label on Clairol’s Herbal Essence shampoo states that it is not tested on animals; Clairol, however, does test other products on animals. Many animal-testing companies have some cruelty-free products, but we must boycott all the companies’ products in order to pressure them into stopping all animal tests. If the label on a company’s product says it is not tested on animals and the company is neither on this “don’t test” nor “do test” lists, please share the company’s contact information with People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals so they may formally inquire about the company’s animal-testing policy. Likewise, if you communicate with a company that claims to be cruelty-free, please ask for a statement in writing and copy the statement to People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals. They will communicate with the company to see if it meets all their cruelty-free criteria. Meanwhile, we recommend purchasing products made only by companies on this “don’t test” list.

Why Do Some Companies’ Product Labels Say, “No Animal Ingredients,” When, in Fact, They Contain Beeswax, Lanolin, Buttermilk, etc.?

Some companies are not educated about or are insensitive to the suffering of animals in the production of certain products that do not involve the actual slaughter of the animal. Despite attempts to educate these companies, some have persisted in inaccurately labeling their products as free of animal ingredients even though it is a fact that honey, lanolin, etc., are animal products. Our advice is always to read the entire label before believing such a statement, and we encourage you to voice your complaints to these companies as well.

How Often Is This List Updated?

The online version of this list is updated approximately every two to four months to reflect additions (e.g., if we are informed of a new company’s non-animal-testing policy), deletions (e.g., if a non-animal-testing company is purchased by an animal-testing company or if a company goes out of business), changes in contact information, etc. This list is based on the most current information available at the time of printing. Companies identified as conducting animal tests may have changed their animal-testing policies after this edition was printed. People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals (PETA, the main compiler of this list) reserves the right to choose which companies will be included, based on company policy. Inclusion on any list is not an endorsement of a company or any of its products. Please contact PETA if you have any questions about the status of listed companies or if you know the address of a company that is not listed.

The following companies manufacture products that ARE NOT tested on animals. Those marked with an asterisk (*) manufacture strictly vegan products—made without animal ingredients, such as milk and egg byproducts, slaughterhouse byproducts, sheep lanolin, honey, or beeswax. Companies without an asterisk may offer some vegan products. Listed in parentheses are examples of products manufactured either by that company or, if applicable, its parent or subsidiary company.

Legend

* company makes or sells strictly vegan products

company is a cruelty-free subsidiary of a parent company that does not comply with the PETA statement of assurance

U.S. Companion-Animal Food Manufacturers That Don't Test on Animals

What's Wrong With "Pet" Food?

Most caring consumers would never guess that lonely dogs and cats are confined in tiny, barren laboratory cages for years on end and subjected to horrible experiments in order to test dog and cat food.

To expose this tragedy, PETA conducted a nine-month undercover investigation of a laboratory that performed cruel animal tests for major animal food companies.

What the investigator uncovered would outrage anyone with a heart:

- Lonely dogs driven mad from confinement in barren steel and cement cells
- Dogs dumped on cold concrete flooring after having chunks of muscle cut out of their thighs
- Experimenters severing dogs' vocal chords in order to keep them quiet
- Sick dogs languishing in their cages without veterinary care

These animals suffered so that animal food companies could slap "new and improved" labels on their products.

The following companies make top-quality food for dogs and cats—without harming animals in laboratories. Please help us drive animal abusers out of business by buying only from these companies.

Companies not on this list either responded that they do conduct laboratory experiments on animals, or they failed to respond to our numerous inquiries and are assumed to conduct laboratory experiments on animals.

For more information about how dog and cat food is contaminated with cruelty and to find the most up-to-date list of companies that don't test on animals, check out IamsCruelty.com.

44 Companies that Test on Animals

Important Notes about this list:

The following companies manufacture products that ARE tested on animals. Those marked with this mark (☹) are presently observing a moratorium on (i.e., current suspension of) animal testing. Please encourage them to announce a permanent ban. Listed in parentheses are examples of products manufactured by either the company listed or, if applicable, its parent company. Companies on this list may manufacture individual lines of products without animal testing (e.g., Clairol claims that its Herbal Essences lines are not animal tested). They have not, however, eliminated animal testing on their entire line of cosmetics and household products. Similarly, companies on this list may make some products, such as pharmaceuticals, that are required by law to be tested on animals. However, the reason for these companies' inclusion is not the required animal testing that they conduct, but rather the animal testing of personal care and household products that is not required by law.

What Can Be Done About Animal Tests Required by Law?

Although animal testing of pharmaceuticals and certain chemicals is still mandated by law, the arguments against using animals in cosmetics testing are still valid when applied to the pharmaceutical and chemical industries. These industries are regulated by the Food and Drug Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency, respectively, and it is the responsibility of the companies that kill animals in order to bring their products to market to convince the regulatory agencies that there is a better way to determine product safety.

Companies resist progress because the crude nature of animal tests allows them to market many products that might be determined to be too toxic if cell culture tests were to be used. Let companies know how you feel about this.
